

In this God-honoring study of birds, your child learns about the glorious design and characteristics of flying creatures, including physical characteristics, nesting habits, flight patterns, and more! Your children will learn how to attract various bird species to your yard and identify them by looking at their special physical characteristics, diverse nests, and interesting domestic practices

Materials needed: Apologia, Exploring Creation with Zoology 1: Flying Creatures of the Fifth Day and Exploring Creation with Zoology 1 Notebooking Journal

Homework: Complete homework and reading assignments as noted on weekly syllabus. Parents are to adjust assignments as they see fit.

Class Objective: In our weekly class time, we will focus on reviewing the “What do you Remember” questions and completing experiments. I will give a guide for the notebooking; however, please use these at your own discretion. Many of the activities are wonderful hands on lessons to reinforce what we are learning. Also, I encourage students to complete the copywork, which will guide them in writing the Word of God on their hearts. The notebooking journal is a wonderful tool in teaching upper elementary and early middle school students to learn the skills of documentation and recording in a fun format.
